Introduction

In many underdeveloped and developing countries especially those ruled by authoritarian or undemocratic regimes, extrajudicial killings have become disturbingly normalized. Bangladesh is no exception.

Over its 54-year history, every government in Bangladesh regardless of political affiliation has faced credible accusations of extrajudicial executions. What should shock the conscience of any democratic society has instead become a tragic pattern, repeated and sustained across decades.

In recent times, a major political upheaval led to the removal of Bangladesh's elected government through mass protests. In its place, an unelected and constitutionally controversial administration was installed, led by Nobel Peace Prize laureate Dr. Muhammad Yunus. This appointment sparked hope. Many believed that under such internationally esteemed leadership, the long-standing culture of lawless state violence would finally come to an end. That hope is now fading fast.

As this unelected regime continues to extend its tenure, reports of extrajudicial killings are rising. According to various media reports, at least 64 individuals have been subjected to extrajudicial execution since September 8, 2024. Human rights observers suspect the actual number is significantly higher.

With the government exercising near-total control over the press, many of these cases are underreported or go entirely unreported. Journalists who dare to investigate or publish such stories face grave consequences: arrests, job losses, revocation of press accreditation, and violent attacks on newsrooms. Some reports are later removed under pressure and erasure of truth, enforced by fear.

Because this administration was never elected, it operates without accountability to the people. As such, these serious allegations are either ignored or dismissed outright.

Every instance of extrajudicial killing must be subject to an impartial investigation. Those responsible regardless of rank or status must face justice. The culture of impunity must end.

We urgently call upon national and international human rights organizations and all global institutions committed to justice to launch independent inquiries and bring the perpetrators to account. Silence is complicity. It is time for the world to act.
